

Engaging Skills-Based Volunteers

It's a growing trend. Skills-based and pro bono volunteering is an innovative trend gathering strength throughout corporate America. According to CECF's 2014 Giving in Numbers report, the number of businesses reporting having some kind of pro bono program has increased from 30% to just over 50% in six years.

Determine if your organization is ready to engage highly skilled volunteers, takeaway sample project descriptions for skills-based volunteers, and identify specific tasks that could engage the volunteers you are seeking within your organization. This workshop will demonstrate how your organization can drive innovation and social impact through skills-based volunteer service.

About the Speakers

Katie Walsh and Zeeda Magnuson have worked with hundreds of nonprofit organizations seeking skilled volunteers and dozens of companies wanting to engage their employees' and retirees' skills to make a positive impact within the Twin Cities community. Join them for a workshop to discuss how your organization can tap into this skills-based resource.

This training is co-sponsored by the Minnesota Association for Volunteer Administration (MAVA) and HandsOn Twin Cities and made available due to a grant from the Corporation for National and Community Service.
